WRITE A POEM!

And get that beautiful Gem Tea Service, worth $25, absolutely free for your poem written on the

"BON-TON" CIGARETTES

Among each 10 cents' worth of cigarettes you will find a coupon. Save them.

For the best poem written upon our "BON-TON" Cigarettes we will give a magnificent Gem Tea Service, consisting of 56 pieces, which cost $25.00, and will now be open in Globe Hall, Madison and Wabash-aves. The award to be made Sept. 1, by competent and disinterested judges, to be selected at that time.

Be careful and purchase of "Bon-Ton Richmond Straight Cut No. 1" Cigarettes, which can be had of any first-class cigar store, and accompany each poem, and be addressed to our Chicago office.

We offer this reward to produce an increased demand for our old and well known "RICHMOND STRAIGHT CUT NO. 1," which has met with unprecedented success everywhere.

The superior quality of the Tobacco used in these Cigarettes, notwithstanding they are higher in price, has given them a popularity unprecedented, NEVER BEFORE ATTAINED by any brand.

These pure, Southern Cigarettes are truly A GREAT LUXURY.

Do not be imposed upon by imitations or cheap brands, which are always flavored with pernicious drugs, used to supply the place of that delightful aroma found only in the HIGHEST PRICE, BRIGHT VIRGINIA TOBACCO. Then give your attention to the "BON-TON RICHMOND STRAIGHT CUT NO. 1," as the packages of are, but they are cheaper in the end, in the luxury and comfort they afford, without the dangers attending cheap cigarette smoking. Ask your dealer for the "BON-TON" and take no other.

THE DRAMA.

Review of the Week.

There is little to add to the review of "Hoity," which appeared in THE TRIBUNE during the week. The merit of the piece is that society is an important component element sometimes. This, indeed, is the basis which the novelist has endeavored to convey to all his books. Like Byron she feels, from an inborn conceit, but unpleasant vein a good natured mood. Horace seeking on a Bridge of Sighs the city and her pose never overcomes the humor and merits of both. Brunnell has not in the least degenerate of eccentricity, but although he is without the support of Burton, his individual comparisons and quaint conceits have lost none of their quaintness. Mr. Hamilton's adaptation of the novel was given by actors and actors of the first rank. He has evident knowledge of stage and his dialogue, a characterizing mode of wit in a most complicated dramatic action. The denouement is for the most part improved by bringing in with the least interest of Lord Cecil to the very latest. The character of Lord Cecil would be a good one were it changed with something more than impersonation of sentiment. One of the best lines in Brunnell's novels is Lord Cecil's remark to Hoity, "I would be a Socialist to Hoity," and a dramatic adaptation would have made the most of this. But Lord Cecil has certain fine lines of dialogue, and the last one of the performance, in which he pleads for pardon, is a masterpiece of pathos. Mr. Hamilton's treatment of Hoity is admirable, also in the scene where Hoity and Lord Cecil are left alone. The last scene of the first act, where Hoity is discovered in the garden and the Japanese ambassador of a foreign power, is also very good. Hoity is left alone, plays Cecil's song, and is overcome with emotion. Lord Cecil, overhearing, comes in, and Hoity, ashamed of her weakness, tells him that she was only thinking of her mother. Cecil, who has been in love with Hoity, but has never told her so, now declares his passion, and Hoity, who has been in love with him, but has never told him so, now declares her passion. Cecil, who has been in love with Hoity, but has never told her so, now declares his passion, and Hoity, who has been in love with him, but has never told him so, now declares her passion. Cecil, who has been in love with Hoity, but has never told her so, now declares his passion, and Hoity, who has been in love with him, but has never told him so, now declares her passion.

A prince and a prince on each hand,

Opinions of English Authorities on Arctic Research—The Survivors and the Dead.

UNDER THE MIDNIGHT SUN.

[SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE AND NEW YORK HERALD.]

New York, July 24.—[Special.]—A dispatch from St. John's, N. F., says: The Arctic relief steamer Bear arrived here this morning from Upernavik, bringing the following account of the proceedings of the Greely expedition, which was furnished that correspondent by Sergt. Rockwell, the only survivor of the party that reached the highest point in north latitude: "The sailors," he said, "were under Capt. Coffin, in charge of Brooklyn City gear, for landing provisions, supplies, coal, ammunition, and other miscellaneous articles. Work began at once, the first unit being taken shortly. A house was constructed, and the party moved on Friday the 21st inst. by September. From this time we were employed during the remainder of the summer in taking out stores and generally assisting the members of the expedition. Heavy rainstorms and a few cloudy days then set in, after lasting fourteen days began to clear again on the evening of September 7, and from that time to the 20th, though it was not warm, the latter part of December was a most lovely spell for the short, sharp Arctic days. Water occasionally froze over, temperature, ranging from zero to 10 degrees above, allowing the performance of a considerable amount of skirmishing, etc. Each day was a counterpart of the one preceding it. Quite an hourly and exercise was practiced and exercises performed. There was considerable of good humor to be noticed, especially the repetitions relating the dangers of bears and previous experiences. In answer to any other person always answered during the two years' existence at Fort Conger—Christmas and New Year's days excepted—with the same to them, they would say in the place together with games, good feeling, and companionable pleasure. The leaders of the expedition are men in the Army, the title of the commander, for the coming future of the Christian Church—a report quite gratifying. Other friends had also remembered the party in a most substantial manner, as the abundance of provisions and the other gifts bore testify.

"Apart from the case of our native Esquimaux, who could not understand keeping the sleep without good reasons, there was no difficulty in the matter. Each man was given his duty to perform, and during the darkness of the winter months, when the sun was not visible, the men were employed in the performance of their duties. Lieut. Greely, the commander of the party, was the first to rise, and after breakfast the men were allowed to do as they pleased. Some read, others played games, and all were employed during the remainder of the day in the performance of their duties.

"After breakfasting at 8 o'clock, the men were ordered to their duties, and the party began their work. In order to obtain astronomical observations it was necessary to have a fire, and the first thing in the morning was to light the fire. Then

The New Board of Trade Building Already Better Known in Style Than the New York Equitable.

Superior Foundations Now Putting In—What the Last Convention Did for Chicago—Lighting the Tunnels.

"I have been paying some attention to the foundations that are being put in for the various large buildings in course of erection downtown," said Tax Commissioner Penington yesterday, "and I believe that they show a marked improvement over the foundations that were previously laid in the city. This may be because I am particularly a new observer of such work, but from what I have seen and heard from at least one good authority I am pleased to see being put in substantial than in superstructure, and the chances of settlements in large buildings are thereby greatly lessened. One of the evidences with which I am not acquainted, but owing to the great difference in the character of Chicago and New York soil that would be safely followed in making calculations. A commission had to be created by the Legislature of the problems which to meet on the site of the present structure. These would be ascertained only by boring into the underlying earth and determining what parts of the city needed particular treatment. Until within a few years architects were not required to be as careful about their foundations in Chicago, for with only a few exceptions no buildings reaching massively strong foundations were needed. But now, when we have those with new and deep wharf previously used and simple laid and piers have been put in the city something more is required. In New York, Boston, and many Eastern cities the question is not considered to investigate the soil of a building site in any serious way, for as a rule it is of the firmest possible character. Chicago, however, is not in a position of economy. Instead, a portion of that city which rests on the first bank of the lake is of a very different quality, for the soil which has been filled in over the original surface is of a treacherous character, and in many places is not capable of supporting any great weight. Hence the necessity for more careful foundations than are required in other cities. Of course, the architects are not to blame for this, but they have to meet it in the best way they can. The Board of Examiners of Plumbers, which has been appointed by the Mayor, is also a new feature in the city government, and will, I hope, do much to improve the character of the plumbing work in many of the buildings.

"I am glad that the Government of the new county board will not be long in getting started, for there is much that it can do for the benefit of the city
